What can you do when you are faced with a world seemingly full of unending hatred? What can you do when you are staring into the unknown, and fear clouds your judgment? What path can be taken when none appears to be given? Do you fall into temptation because it seems like the unavoidable thing to do? Do you surrender to the limits that others have given you? That is not the answer. But remember, God has all the answers. However, how we respond to the questions that life gives us is just as important. What can you do as a child of God when the troubles of life try to take away your hope and faith? What do you do when your character and integrity is at the brink of being lost? As the child of God that you are, you must rise above. What we all must do, as people who are preparing the way for our next generation, is rise above. Sometimes it's not about answering the "why". Too many people try to figure out why something happened when they should ask, "What does God say in His Word on what I should do?" You may not know why someone hates you, or why you're going through what you're going through, but you can rise above it.
