Nathan Henry thinks of no one but his family. He hasn't more so then the moment he gave up going to an ivy league school to support them. With a catatonic mother, a blind sister, and a fifteen year old brother on the verge of being thrown out of their home, Nathan has to work twice as hard (and away from his family) to put their lives back together.

He is dependent on his occupation as a respected special military agent.

The most important and wealthy people pay for his service to protect them at private events and such. It pays well and feeds the mouths his father and two older brothers left behind. It's a job that he has put his life on for time and time again, but manages to come out on top every time.

After returning from a physically draining assignment, another opportunity from the most wealthiest man known arises. Instead of looking forward to a hot shower and weeks of catching up with Z's, Nathan is pushed to take on this assignment that would, in its completion, pay him handsomely. The assignment? Escort the power-hungry and wealthy man's daughter to her intended. Sounds simple enough. But Nathan could not have been more wrong. He was not expecting the young heiress to come in the form of Mara Hallden. Mara knows only the life of isolation; growing up in a mansion all by herself and having seen her father only four times in her twenty-one years and now he expects her to be married off to a man she's never met! The heiress only dreams of her freedom to do as she pleases and she alone is enough to make Nathan want to take on other dangerous assignments instead, like raiding foreign bombers and rescuing hostages from bank stick ups. With much persuasion (perhaps more like force) from his younger siblings, Nathan will have to hold onto his pride and try to win over this blue-eyed princess. She will be his greatest, most stressful, and mind-blowing assignment yet.
