Good Parenting Trumps Technology Every Time! Remember the days when you went to the playground with your child, remaining vigilant as she climbed the monkey bars? Now her playground is the internet and no amount of watching on your part will guarantee her total safety. Pulling the plug won't work. Young people today depend upon their cellphones and computers.

Your child is living in a social media world and, like it or not, so are you! What do you do? Charlene C. Giannetti has been writing about young adolescents and teens for more than 15 years. The co-author of eight books for parents, she has criss-crossed the country delivering straightforward, sensible advice about technology and social media.

She now writes about parenting issues for Woman Around Town, an award-winning website for women in New York and Washington, D.C. "Parenting in a Social Media World" brings together her best columns advising how parents can use social media to create teachable moments with their children. Technology is changing the world but the basic tenets of good parenting remain the same.
