Niambi Cook would have taken her assignment to tutor Campion Greer much better if she hadn't witnessed his uncle attacking a dancer outside her aunt's club.

The lovely school brain had no wish to assist a spoiled, rich jock no matter how sweet (or sexy) he was.

Still, Camp's charm couldn't be denied. The relationship between tutor and tutee soon merged into one of friendship.

Niambi began to wonder then whether she should clue Camp in on the fact that the uncle he adored was a monster in disguise. After all, he was a friend- a friend she was slowly yet surely falling in love with.
