George Crandall is a successful businessman who avoided religious activity and had an obsessive fear of death. After dying, he is taught that life is eternal following a continuous path from pre-mortal, through mortal, and post-mortal phases.

He learns about the reality of God and Jesus Christ as his savior. God created earth so that His children could receive a physical body and have freedom of choice to grow and develop by the challenges that they would face. George is thrilled by the eternal truths that he is receiving and the post-mortal life that he is living. Just as he has reached the stage of overcoming the shortcomings of not being religiously involved during mortality, a decision that he had made during mortality comes back to haunt him. His folly of fearing death becomes dramatically exposed. Now he faces a major new decision and has to develop a means to accomplish his goal.
