Kitty Evanston stood by the open window of Dr. Haley McAlister's office, gulping air. Beads of sweat dripped down her face. "I can't go through with this," she said. Traumatized by nightmare memories of a prior operation at the hospital, Kitty Evanston abruptly canceled both Haley's pre-surgery psychological testing and the scheduled operation--but not before revealing the terrifying conversation she'd heard while she was under anesthetic the last time. Now she's dead. And the hospital would like to see her dark story buried with her. Memory testing is one of Haley's specialties, and she's not about to dismiss Evanston's recollections as psychotic. Not when the hospital is deeply involved in financial problems, FDA investigations, and cover-ups, and key hospital personnel are unwilling to cooperate with her investigation into Kitty's claims. Haley's expertise in lie detection tells her she can't trust all of her colleagues--not even the man she has begun a relationship with. And trust is one thing her life may depend on, especially when it comes to love. . .or murder
